Design, properly understood, is at the root of language, science, and every other evidence of humanly discovered or assigned order. When one seeks or acknowledges relationships, when one recognizes similarity, when one discerns difference, when one measures or counts or otherwise orders any set of sensations, he is designing. It is a habit, a condition, and a function of mind so vital to our kind that we exercise it without consciousness. We can strengthen that resource of the human mind precisely by using it consciously, by educating ourselves to the properties and possibilities of design.

If we are to fabricate a cosmology, understand our universe, comprehend our sources, measure our resources, accept our nature, honor our planet; if we are to realize and shape life so that it can be well-lived by many people, we must apply design.

I do not believe design is arcane, remote, clouded in mystique. Both art and design are accessible, reachable, through understanding, information, experience, and learning. I believe Rhode Island School of Design — both College and Museum — provides an ideal setting for learning art and design.

Crazy Stories

By Lisa Glickman

Made
In 1969.

Once upon a ti me there was a girl named MARIGOLD.
She was a princess, and she was not happy. She was not happy because her mother was dead and father was cruel.
Her father would not let her were pretty gowns or bows in her hair. MARIGOLD'S father's name was RONALD.
He rode on horses and in cariges, but MARIGOLD had to w alk. One day MARIGOLD reali zed that that day was her birthday. She didn't get any preasents. This made MARIGOLD cry, and her father ~~laughed~~ laughed. So MARIGOLD ran away.

The End.

Once upon a time there was a horse who had lost his head.
He looked every where but he could not find his head.
HE began too cr y. Finally he found a head, but it was not h is. He did not know that though. So he put it on his neck.
THE N, he went to the mirror, but, alas, it was not his head. So the h orse began too cry again. His tears were so sticky that they glued the head on very tightly so it stayed there forever, and the horse finally had a head. Unfortunately it was a hamster's head so he looked rather strange, but he was happy anyways.

y Susan Glickman

Dear Monty,

I was never able to make any of the photo sessions - will you use this picture for me please? - if you are taking any submissions for roads etc - will you print the excerpt below. Thanks very much

Karen Rae Flynn

"Let it be in your calms or in your storms, sweet lake, and in the sight of your laughing hillsides, and in these black pines, and in these wild rocks overhanging your waters!"

"Let it be in the breeze tumbling and passing by, in the sounds of your shores and their echoes, in the silver-browed star that whitens your surface with its soft lights!"

"Let the moaning wind, the sighing reed, the light perfumes of your scented air, let everything that is heard, seen, or breathed, let everything say: 'They loved!'"
